HP Pavilion dv9000

BUILT-IN 3G TO...

Connect you to email, the Internet and company applications whenever and wherever you choose.

- Simplicity - ready to use straight out of the box and nothing to install.
- Greater coverage
- No need for WiFi - far greater accessibility and freedom than with Wi-Fi which is restricted to specific hotspots.
- Predictable costs - 'always on', but you only pay for the data you send and receive, not the amount of time you are connected.
- No conflict - full integration and testing by the manufacturer means no conflicts between the hardware and software.
- Improved performance - network performance is better as the antenna is built into the laptop's screen.
- Ease of use - greatly increases roaming capabilities since customers just need Vodafone coverage wherever they are.

ARTICLE OF THE MONTH: MOBILE WORKING

Mobile working is nothing new. Travelling sales people and tradesmen have been with us for as long as anyone can remember and in industry today we have many more examples of workers operating outside of a fixed base - consultants on projects, accountants conducting audits, engineers on construction sites, and so on, not to mention managers roving from office to office as they go about their business.

Against this background, it's interesting to consider why everyone is talking so much about mobile working at the moment, given that it's essentially a very old concept. So what is it that's changed to put the mobile working conversation back on the management agenda?

The great thing about these trends is that people sitting at their desks or operating in some other location within the business are now much more plugged into both the immediate work environment and the wider world in which they and their business operate. Sending an email to query an order to a customer in the USA or a supplier in Korea from a desk in the UK is now something people take for granted.*

CASE STUDY

Howorth Airtech Limited From local to global

For more than 100 years the Howorth name has represented:

- Technical creativity.
- Expertise in air engineering.
- Expertise in its application to climatise and control the working environment.

During the 1960s, Howorth's experience and skills were applied in response to the needs of the medical profession with the design and construction of the worlds first Ultra Clean Ventilation system for the bacterial elimination from surgical operating rooms.

Working to extremely strict International cleanliness standards and leading the way in Surgical Theatre Control, Howorth Airtech is a truly international company.
